Exile Squadron blasts its way onto Steam

Veszprém, Hungary - October 15, 2019.

One man indie developer One Bit Studio is bringing its second game to Steam on November 11, 2019. The retro shoot ‘em up Exile Squadron puts the player into the role of an elite space fighter, tasked to defend Earth against a colonial invasion. With a wide variety of unique and upgradeable weapons, the players have to blast their way through waves of enemies, while competing with others through the online leaderboards.

“I was always a big fan of arcade shooters back in the ‘80s and ‘90s, although I was not allowed to waste too many coins in the arcades, thanks to my parents. So after starting my game developer journey, it was evident to me that I will try to create my own shoot ‘em up at one point. Even though I never considered myself a top player in this genre (far from it), I just wanted to create something which captured the adrenaline-pumping feel of these games.” - said the creator of the game, Gabor Domjan.

The main draw of Exile Squadron are the weapons, which were designed to be completely different from each other. No more “samey” lasers, this shoot ‘em up gives you weapons which play and feel unique. If you want to get close and personal, equip your ship with a flak cannon, but if you want to keep your distance, the rocket launcher will be your best friend in battle. But that’s not all, the game offers plasma weapons, bombs, ground support units, flamethrowers and much more, so you will be having fun experimenting with them, finding those which are the best fit for you.

And you have to find the best weapons if you want to compete in the online leaderboards. Keeping faithful to the arcade traditions, Exile Squadron offers a competitive component through its scoring system. Replay the campaign, build up your scores and see if you have what it takes to be the top pilot!
